QUOTABLES

Lauren Coughlin on her putting routine

“Yeah, I do one practice stroke kind of behind it because I'm thinking about my speed, how far back I want to take it. And then I'm kind of getting my line and picking a spot a couple inches in front of the ball. Then I take a big deep breath to try to chill the nerves, kind of -- it kind of can help your nervous system come down a little bit and not be so fight or flight and you can put a little bit better stroke on it. Yeah, and then I step into the ball.”

Lauren Coughlin on when she adopted her putting routine

“Pretty much since I started putting really well like around Phoenix or so last year. You know, like Dr, Julie, we talked about stuff like that, Rotella, just always trying to keep you from getting -- tensing up. Again, a deep breath can help your body relax for a second. That's the major thing you have to be when you are trying to putt. You can't be tense. It's already hard enough to put a good stroke on it, and if you're tense who knows what might happen.”

Ariya Jutanugarn on her expectations now

“My expectation, make sure I can walk all day tomorrow. That's it. Because like what I said before. Came to this week I didn't feel good at all. I've been working on some stuff and I didn't feel good about my swing. I came this far, it's just like a gift.”

Angel Yin on her match against Jeeno Thitikul

"The second one. My chip-in on 13 really helped me feel confident, because the golf course is getting ridiculously hard. Everything is like concrete hard and putts are hard. Like 11 I was downhill, kind of straight, not too much to it, and I just babied it and I was just laughing. You're just so scared at this point because some of the putts can get really, really fast."
