Today – Mostly sunny skies this AM with temperatures in the upper-40s. Light and variable winds today will remain variable much of the day, with speeds ranging between 5-10mph. Isolated showers may develop by 11AM in the terrain to the north of the course and should remain confined there through the afternoon. A slight chance will persist for some blow-over drizzle at the course. If showers are to develop just north, a brief increase in outflow winds may occur.

Extended forecast – Increasing N/NW winds are expected Friday as high pressure starts to push in from the west. Gusts Friday afternoon will range between 22-24mph with a steady increase into the day Saturday. A continued uptick in gust potential for Saturday has occurred with gusts now forecast into the upper-20s through the late morning/early afternoon before diminishing near sunset. Conditions will settle back down for Sunday in addition to steadily warming temperatures.

Forecast prepared by meteorologist Tim Calamari.
