Today – The cold front from overnight is still passing through the area. One more round of light showers is possible this morning before 10am. Cloud cover will persist for a few hours afterwards, but mostly sunny conditions are expected through the afternoon. The high temperature will depend on how much sun occurs, but a high temperature in the upper 60s F (near 20 C) is expected. Winds will remain from the west-northwest today, but pick up in speeds. Sustained winds near 15 mph (24 km/hr) and wind gusts in the low 20s mph (near 30 km/hr) are expected.

Extended Forecast – A few showers are possible overnight Thursday into Friday morning. This may lead to a shower or two in the morning, but partly cloudy skies will move in for the afternoon. Once again, a chance of a shower overnight into Saturday morning is possible, but partly cloudy conditions should continue. The next system bringing rain to the area approaches on Sunday, but currently Sunday remains dry. Wetter conditions move in for next week. Winds are trending lower through the weekend. The primary direction will be westerly each day, but the morning hours may have slightly variable conditions. Wind speeds will remain near 10 mph (16 km/hr) with wind gusts less than 20 mph (32 km/hr).
