Extended Forecast – High pressure will be in place tomorrow and much of Friday giving way to dry and hazard free conditions. A slight chance of showers will develop late on Friday, mainly after 4pm with a gradual increase in coverage and intensity expected overnight into Saturday as the northern edge of weakening typhoon Champi lifts moisture north over the region. Rounds of showers and potentially even a few tstorms will be possible on Sunday and Monday as moisture is reinforced as the remnants of Champi interact with an approaching cold front from the west. Overnight low temperatures will be in the mid-40s to lower 60s with daytime highs in the 60s to 70s.

Forecast prepared by DTN meteorologist Marcus Hustedde.
