Extended Forecast – Scattered showers will be around the area early tomorrow morning with clearing for much of the day. Winds will significantly increase tomorrow with peak gusts around 35 mph out of the northwest, especially during the afternoon hours. Dry and hazard free weather is expected on Thursday and Friday as high pressure builds across the area. The remnants of what is now Typhoon Champi will shift north towards the area this weekend providing scattered showers and possibly embedded tstorms. Overnight lows will be from the mid-40s to upper 50s with daytime highs in the lower 60s to lower 70s.
