Extended Forecast – Typhoon Champi remains a powerful typhoon this morning located to the southeast of Taiwan; however, it will interact with an environment that will substantially weaken it throughout the day into tonight. Champi will likely get within 50 miles of the coast of Taiwan if not making landfall sometime Saturday afternoon. This will allow moisture to stream northward near our area giving way to rounds of showers. The heaviest activity is expected to our south over open waters. Additional showers are likely to develop on Sunday and Monday as the remnants of the typhoon move across the region. The storm threat with this activity is currently low.
