Extended forecast – Anticipate isolated morning and scattered afternoon showers on Friday as a slow-moving upper-level disturbance rotates over the Florida Peninsula. The potential for any thunderstorms will be very low, with a lightning probability near 10% Friday afternoon. A drier and more stable airmass will gradually filter in through the weekend. Saturday will see an isolated shower potential prior to dry conditions becoming restored on Sunday. There is a slight risk for patchy fog Friday through Sunday but anticipate that any reduction in visibility will improve by 8am each morning.
