Extended forecast – Anticipate isolated morning and scattered afternoon showers on Thursday and Friday as a slow-moving upper-level disturbance rotates over the Florida Peninsula. Thunderstorms will remain an isolated (10-20% probability) threat Thursday and Friday afternoon. A drier and more stable airmass will gradually filter in through the weekend. Saturday will see an isolated shower potential prior to dry conditions becoming restored on Sunday. Areas of fog may develop each morning Friday through Sunday, with visibility set to improve between 8:00-8:30am each day.

Forecast prepared by DTN meteorologist Joe Halvorson.
