Today – As showers pass through northern Michigan, an isolated shower nearby cannot be ruled out this morning. During much of the day, outside of a slight chance for a pop-up shower or storm, partly to mostly cloudy skies will prevail with temperatures to peak in the mid 80s. Breezy to gusty conditions are forecast today with the peak period of wind gusts in the low 30s likely from 1-5pm.

Tomorrow – As a cold front from the overnight makes its way further eastward, morning showers are likely with slight chances for an isolated storm. Remnant rain showers will linger throughout the afternoon with coverage to decrease after 12pm. Temperatures will trend cooler post-front with high temperatures to reach the upper 60s. Additionally, breezy northwesterly winds are likely to develop with occasional gusts near 20-25 mph possible.
