Today – On and off rain showers are likely throughout today, becoming more scattered later in the afternoon to early evening. Much of this activity is forecast as rain though a few rumbles of thunder or an isolated storm cannot be ruled out. Breezy winds will persist outside of precipitation with high temperatures to occur in the mid to upper 80s.

Sunrise: 6:23am / Sunset: 6:20pm | Rainfall: 0.25-0.50 in, locally higher amounts possible in heavier showers.

Overnight observed rainfall: 0.05 in.

Extended forecast – Rain shower chances and slightly breezy winds are likely to continue into Thursday; an isolated storm cannot be ruled out though at a lower likelihood. By the end of the week, a drier pattern is forecast to return with only slight chances of an isolated rain shower at times. Southeasterly to easterly flow will ease some into Friday and Saturday before winds slightly increase out of the east-northeast on Sunday. Daily high temperatures will remain in the upper 80s with overnight lows to taper to the low to mid 70s.
