Today – Throughout today, partly cloudy skies will persist with breezy southeasterly flow to return to the area. Occasional wind gusts approaching near 25 mph will be possible, especially during the afternoon. As the sun rises and temperatures warm to the upper 80s, a slight chance for a spotty shower or storm is possible later in the day. Feels-like temperatures will once again trend in the mid to upper 90s. By sunset, winds and temperatures will taper with scattered clouds to remain overhead.

Extended forecast – During the weekend, a frontal boundary will gradually progress eastward through the Gulf reaching the eastern Yucatan by Sunday. Ahead of this feature, periods of increased moisture may filter into the area leading to daily chances for isolated showers and storms with the better potential to favor late this weekend. In tandem, breezy southeasterly winds will likely continue with the occasional gust near 25 mph remaining possible. Daily high temperatures are forecasted to approach near 90F with feels-like temperatures to occur in the upper 90s to near 100F. Some reprieve will return in the overnight with low temperatures in the mid 70s.
