Extended forecast – Heading into the weekend, a frontal boundary will gradually progress eastward through the Gulf likely reaching the eastern Yucatan by Sunday. This will encourage some moisture to lift into the area influencing slight chances for a pop-up shower or storm each afternoon. Ahead of this feature, southeasterly flow will increase to wind speeds near 7-14 mph with gusts near 25 mph possible. Daily high temperatures will persist near 90F with feels-like temperatures to reach the upper 90s to near 100F, especially on Saturday. Some relief will return each night with low temperatures in the mid 70s.
