Extended forecast – Continued dry conditions are likely to persist throughout the weekend with partly cloudy skies overhead. As the high pressure continues to build in, northwesterly winds will increase to 7-15 mph on Saturday with peak gusts to approach close to 30 mph – primarily mid-morning into the early afternoon. Winds may ease slightly into Sunday, however, occasional gusts approaching 20-25 mph will remain possible. By Monday, a frontal boundary will influence chances for scattered showers and isolated storms. Temperatures over the next few days will continue to peak in the 70s with overnight lows trending a bit cooler into the low to mid 50s.
