Tuesday – The rain and moisture from yesterday has moved offshore leaving calm and clear conditions this morning. While a few clouds may build in during the afternoon, dry conditions are expected today. Winds will remain light with a few breezes near 10 mph, but otherwise light and variable. Temperatures will warm slowly back into the mid 60s by the afternoon.

Extended forecast – Wednesday morning will see calmer weather before rain showers and winds increase. Typhoon In-Fa will pass offshore Japan and bring widespread rain from Wednesday night through Thursday. Winds will also pick up and gust up to 20 mph. The majority of the moisture departs the region Thursday night, but isolated rain showers will remain possible through the weekend. Otherwise, partly cloudy to mostly sunny conditions will prevail. Winds will weaken back to less than 10 mph. High temperatures will remain in the 60s this week except on Friday when a high near 70F is possible, with overnight lows cooling from the 50s to the 40s over the weekend.
